STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Little Tavern hamburger shops were built by the dozens in the 1930's and 40's in the Washington area. They were neon-illuminated "cottages," sheathed in white and green enamel. The founder of the Little Tavern chain, Harry Duncan, built his first Washington hamburger stand in 1927 and the firm expanded rapidly throughout the 30's and 40's. Charles E. Brooks and George E. Stone of the Stonebrook Corporation designed the overall use of enamelled steel panels, and Duncan applied this method throughout the chain. The Little Tavern shops have recently been restored by owner Gerald Wedren and architect Tim Crosby. The sympathetic duplication of original materials and neon signage won praise from critic Benjamin Forgey of the Washington Post. The Little Tavern shops are democratic architecture at its best: they add a touch of charm and whimsy to dozens of streetscapes in Washington and its suburbs.
